SPEECH OF JUDGE ALFRED DARTE, DEDICATION OF CIVIL WAR MONUMENT,
CARBONDALE, PA. MAY 30, 1885.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen, Comrades all; I have no desire to go contrary to generally received opinions, to overturn, even if it were possible, the traditions of the elders. It is not for me, standing here on this platform, to dispute what has passed into a proverb among the people. Centuries ago it was said, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country". In some measure I spent many years among you as boy and man, this is my country. For all that, you could not have conferred a higher honor upon me than in asking me to address you on this occasion. For the opportunity of so doing I thank you with a full heart. We have met here amid the mountains of Pennsylvania to dedicate a monument, the free gift of a great people, to some of the best and bravest of her sons; we have a pride, as we think pardonable, in the Old Keystone, with the area of an Empire and her millions of sons and daughters. She is a grand old mother, with her backbone of iron and her heart of coal. But, splendid as is the record of her material prosperity, never the day and never the deed, which reflected such undying glory and honor upon Pennsylvania as did her course when the hydra headed monster "States Rights", clutched the throat of the Nation. The ink on the President's proclamation was scarcely dry when her men were in ranks and five companies of Pennsylvanians marching through Baltimore on the 18th of April 1861, were the very first volunteers from the North who reached Washington. She gave to the Union Army Meade, Hancock and Reynolds who breached and rolled back at Gettysburg the highest tide. The 56th Pennsylvania, Michael Flynn was Capt., opened the infantry fight on that historic field. It was fitting it should be so of the rebellion. She sent for her population, as many of her sons as any State in the Union. They did their simple duty and did it well. On every battlefield from the first Bull Run to the Appomattox, the blood of Pennsylvania's sons mingled with that of the Maine men and the Californians. Many of them were men of exceptional bravery and coolness. At Gettysburg when the "Louisiana Tigers" charged in upon our guns and were bayoneting the gunners at their firing, the Captain of the battery, one of my townsmen, a member of Ely Post, a Wyoming Seminary boy, sprang upon one of his guns and flinging his sabre amid the lurid smoke of battle shouted out "Boys, not one must live to tell that we lost our guns in Pennsylvania. Inspired by such a leader these artillermen fought with sponge staffs, ramrods and stones picked from the ground in defense of the guns they were to guard and they did not lose their guns, somehow such men seldom do lose guns. The enemy fell there or fled, and it is said that that famous brigade was so nearly annihilated that it never reorganized. In the same fight when Col. Hister of the 150th Penna Infantry was shot in the mouth so that he could not speak by a motion he turned over the command of his Regiment to the Lt. Col. and then picking up the musket and accoutrements of a dead soldier, went in with the boys on a bayonet charge. He could not speak with his own mouth but he spoke from the mouth of his musket. At Chancellorsville, Frank Beardsly Captain of the 141 Penna. Inf., another Seminary boy seeing one of his men firing too high, struck the musket down with his sword saying "Fire lower you infernal fool, there has not been a single rebel in heaven since Lucifer was kicked out". At Stony Creek Station Frank Gray, "Big Frank", we called him, of the 4th Pa. Cavalry while leading a mounted charge on a battery had his sabre hand shattered by a grape shot. The arm fell helpless at his side with the sabre knot attached but he made no sound, his courage was of the heroic type, mastery of his six foot four of humanity. With a knightly devotion he kept at the front till the battery was won and then fell fainting from the saddle.

And there was Peter Keenan of the 8th Penna. Cavalry. Were any of you at Chancellorsville? Do you remember the dread you felt when the crash of musketry, roar of artillery and rebel yell told you where out on our right, Jackson with three fourths of the rebel Army had struck the Eleventh Corp^d and smashed by the very weight of numbers? That advance must be stopped. Pleasonton chanced to be there and ordered Keenan to charge the enemy with his regiment. They both knew that it meant almost certain death but they knew that time must be had to get Ashley into position and Keenan with less than five hundred sabres charged the advance of thirty thousand. Of course he died there with most of his men. But, not Asinklinsel, grasping an armful of the enemy's spears and sheathing them in his own breast, that dying he might make way for Liberty. Not the charge of the "Light Brigade" at Balaklava immortalized by Tennyson showed greater forgetfulness of self, or more heroic devotion for which they fought. The Light Brigade charged because somebody blundered. Keenan charged to save the Army and he did it. The enemy staggered before that handful of chivalrous men, never dreaming but that it would be foolish. Pleasonton gained ten priceless minutes by Kennan's charge. He got his guns into position, and when the enemy again advanced the hot air throbbed and pulsated with the crash of thirty cannon. The double loaded guns sent showers of grape and cannister. But they were led by Jackson hissing and ranting through their ranks. But these frenzied men charged up to the very muzzles of the guns. They did not take them. It could not be done. They did not fall back. They were blown back by that storm of iron and shreds of flesh, pieces of bone and spots of blood, the horrid fragments of what had been men were scattered among the trees. Nothing living could take those guns. All honor to Peter Keenan. Thanks to him and Pleasonton, the Grand Old Army of the Potomac. Not outnumbered, not outfought, but terribly outgeneraled, was saved to win at Gettysburg. It was my good fortune to know these men, not better or braver it maybe, than hundreds and thousands from other states, but we are proud of them as Pennsylvanians, but higher, better, grander than all else we are proud that they too were United States soldiers, proud that they too wore the blue. And it is to these, and such as these, that we dedicate this monument. With such feelings for our comrades, it seems peculiarly fitting that on this day specially set apart for that purpose, we the army of the living should visit in their silent camping grounds the army of the dead. That, if the spirits of those who have gone before do revisit the scenes of their earthly labor, they may know that we who survive so gratefully the benefits they died to give us, are not unmindful of their services and sufferings. For, though many of them died ere the struggle ended, not one doubted, "The high hopes which burn like stars sublime are born in the strife for freedom, though true hearts perish in the time we bitterliest need them." We meet here to day, not to celebrate a victory, not to exult over a fallen enemy, we have no desire if it were possible to call up again the fierce hate and hot blood of our horrible civil strife, we would not triumph over those who fought bravely and failed. Some would say, "Let the dead past bury its dead", So say we. We have no sword of harshness for our former enemies. Its twenty years since we called them rebels and were straining the resources of the Nation to crush them. To day they are our friends and brothers, citizens of the same broad country, under the same old flag, but in spite of them, with not a star erased. We think they survived. We know they suffered. We have heard a great deal about forgiving and forgetting. We have forgiven. Number the nations of the earth, count from the point where the far North meets the far South, take the wings of the morning and chase the sunrise round the globe. Count them all. Read me the names of all the nations, and then tell me if you find an instance of such forgiveness. There is not one in all that list. Go back of all that, back to the dawn of ancient history. Search amid its dim and misty pages and tell me if you find there an instance of such forgiveness. There is not one in all that list. Tell me if you find there an instance where any nation ever put down such a rebellion as we did by force and no man died as a penalty for treason. There is not one in all that list. We have forgiven. But we can't forget. It is too soon. The grass has not grown green oftne enough above the graves of our dead. There are too many widows and orphans scattered throughout the land. too many crippled soldiers, hobbling toward the grave with scarce body enough left to hold their faithful hearts. We can't do it. It is too soon. We do forgive our former enemies, but don't ask us to forget our dead comrades. For these are our dead, we cannot forget if we would how they died and why. We must remember that the principles they died for were our principles. That the right of the majority to govern is the broad foundation upon which our nationality rests. That once gone and the superstructures crumbles our states become but fragments, imperfect, powerless, too weak to put down internal strife or to defend themselves against foreign enemies. In our favored land we never must as did the older nations, to crown with lands the conqueror who came with his triumphal car and train of heart broken captives, sole remnants of destroyed nations. We commemorate no wars for national aggrandizement. We are not a warlike people The traditions of the United States are peace. Not like the dastard's peace at any price, but peace, just so long as it can be maintained with safety to our national honor and national integrity. The grand old mothers who founded this nation, born and bred on this side of the Atlantic, far from the heat and turmoil of European strife have looked out over the earth from their seclusion and learned, that wars to establish a military reputation were a delusion and a snare, and that wars for national aggrandizement meant financial ruin. Were they right? France has fought for a military reputation, what they call the glory of France, but not all the military genius of the hero of Lodi, Austerlitz and the Pyramids backed by the enduring but desperate courage of her soldiers could pull back the tide of invasion from the very gates of her capital and twice in this century, with her great armies broken and defeated, Paris, the most beautiful city on the earth has been in the possession of foreign troops. England has fought for territorial aggrandizement and extended domain, the blood of her soldiers has sprinkled almost every soil beneath the sun and so much treasure has she wasted in war that to day her national debt amounts to enough to have bought and paid for every foot of territory she ever conquered; a debt which no man living dreams will ever be paid. Not such have been our wars. They have been the struggle of those who fought for all that makes existence worth having, despising life if defeated-history could tell you how they fought. The world knows that story by heart. Struggling thus and on that principle we have borne the old flag forward, many times torn by the cannon shot; Not victorius in every fight, but the United States never yet made peace until victory perched upon her banner. Some of the grandest of mans' constructions on the earth are memorial structures. The Pyramids of Egypy are supposed to be such, but they have long outlived the nations which built them, and if so, so utterly have they failed of their object that learned men argue and quarrel as to what they actually commemorate while the dust of the desert buries their foundations as it has long since buried their founders. Monuments, great or small, beautiful as the may be, are but the exponents of the heart's best feelings. We have inshrinéd the memory of our dead defenders in the hearts of a grateful people and in that heart beating high with hope, their memory is as fresh and green to day as though the clods had just rested on their bosoms. Their little ones whom you saw to day with their bright faces and beautiful flowers, will pass that night of gratitude down the generations until in the years to come, the words, "We died in the Army" shall with the mantle of charity cover a multitude of sins and make the spot where the dead soldier rests hallowed ground. It is peculiarly fitting that your monument should be located just here. This is the very spot where the first Company assembled, where they started for the war, and it was here they were welcomed on their return by their friends and neighbors. In front of your church one Sunday morning twenty four years ago, I saw a man distributing handbills calling for recruits to the people as they came out from worship. This is the center of your City and it is well that here amid the bustling, busy marts of trade, there should stand a perpetual reminder that citizenship means duties to do as well as blessings to enjoy. That we have rights worth fighting for and if need be dying for. To us who were in the war its events are as yesterday, but, to those who have grown to manhood and womanhood since 1861 it is as much a matter of history as the Crusades or the Revolution. In the course of nature before 1900 most of the present survivors will have gone over to the majority, for "The boys in blue are turning gray, Their guns our ranks are thinning, We bluffed death off many a day, But he'll at last be winner.

We list no more the shrieking shell,
No more the grape shot rattle,
But comrades fall while tolls the bell,
As once they fell in battle.

What though above our wasting ranks
No battle flag is gleaming God's red and white in morning light O'er heaven's vault is streaming.

Then close the ranks as years roll on
As life's dim sun grows colder, Face death today as deaths gone by
With shoulder firm to shoulder.

Though the scant the muster roll below
Abive 'tis growing longer
Though faint on earth our voices grow
In heaven the'll swell the stronger.

Other

the nations honor the leaders, the men who plan battles, instead of the men who fight them. We honor them all. Not alone the men who wear the straps and stars upon their shoulders, but the enlisted men, the privates in the ranks. The men who rolled the of our the men who swung the sabre with Sheridan. The men who with clenched teeth and poised bayonet held the Round Top for Meade at Gettysburg. To them, and such as them we dedicate this monument. We have been taught to revere the memory of our Revolutionary ancestors, so we should. They fought to establish a Nation. Back in the sixties those men we honor today fought to maintain the right of the nation, born of that seven years of suffering, to live. We looked upon those old Continentals as almost another race of beings from those we saw every day about us. We saw them as though it were through a maze, misty with distance. Some thought we had lost the breed of noble hearts. That our people had become so absorbed in the strife for gain and worldly advantage that nothing could arouse them to deeds worthy of those who had gone before. But the first gun fired at Sumpter startled the Nation. Its roar echoing from Maine to Oregon drowned all sounds of strife of politics, religion or nationality. The almost universal cry became, "Our country may she always be right but our country, right or wrong." It was as though an enemy had smitten the mother who bore us, and the children from every hillside and every valley gathered to her defense as cheerfully as going to a wedding. The whole North was aflame. The arts of peace seemed likely to perish from among us, and all talked, thought and dreamed only of war. It seemed as though the Nation had made a new departure and was making war a business. We were surprised it is true. It was hard to realize that war was upon us, fierce, relentless and cruel and that, too, waged by those whom we had been taught to call our brothers. We had heard so much of disunion that we had ceased to fear that the threat would be carried out. That sword had been the lash held over the North like a bugbear for generations. When a wrong was to go unredressed or a right be surrendered, the Southern leaders have but to shriek that word with its attendant grizzly horrors in the ears of their , and they became as pliant as the hands of their Southern masters as clay in the hands of the potter. But now, that word had lost its power and the time for action was at hand. There was a new feeling in the nation and they feared that the government would not be carried on entirely in the interests of the slave oligarchy. In the South they were ready. Their leaders had done their work well. Since the formation of the government they had stood with the left hand outstretched receiving more than their share of the bounties of the nation while with the right they were hewing away with the energy of desperation at the very foundations of our government. It had always been the policy in the South to keep their appointments in the military and naval service full, while from the North there were always vacancies, so that at the outbreak of the rebellion there was actually a majority of officers in both branches of the regular service from the South. They had corrupted the regular army and the navy so that no one knew who to trust.
